WHEREAS, in 1914, the City of Nashville hired its first African American public health nurse to provide nursing and other aid to families of color suffering from disparate rates of tuberculosis disease - thus was the beginning of public health nursing services aimed towards the reduction of health disparities and inequities in Nashville and Davidson County; and

WHEREAS, for a century the public health nurses of Nashville and Davidson County have provided public health nursing services to populations within, and throughout the county; and

WHEREAS, these services have promoted, protected, and restored the health of generations within and throughout the county; and
