INTRODUCTION

The Thomas Sigismund Stribling Papers (1907-1982) are centered on Thomas Sigismund Stribling (1881-1965), writer and Pulitzer Prize winner, and his wife, Louella Stribling of Clifton, Wayne County, Tennessee. The Thomas Sigismund Stribling Papers are a gift of Mr. and Mrs. William Hughes of Clifton, Tennessee.

The materials in this collection measure 22.5 linear feet. There are no restrictions on the materials.

Single photocopies of unpublished writings in the Thomas Sigismund Stribling Papers may be made for purposes of scholarly research. However, published writings require permission from the copyright owners.

SCOPE AND CONTENT

The Thomas Sigismund Stribling Papers, containing approximately 3,500 items, span the period 1907 to 1982. The collection is composed of book reviews, clippings, literary contracts, correspondence, copyright agreements, eulogies, genealogical data, interviews with the author, income tax records, notebooks, writings, including published and unpublished novels and short stories, and several miscellaneous items. The collection, because of its totality, allows the researcher the unique opportunity to view the multifaceted career of T.S. Stribling.

A large portion of the collection consists of correspondence from Stribling's earliest years as a writer to the mid 1960s. The correspondence begins with letters to his family while traveling in Europe (1914) and concludes with his acceptance of his illness and his death in 1965. Aside from other personal and family matters, the correspondence encompasses a wide variety of topics dealing with the literary world and the world of the literature in the United States.

One section of the correspondence deals with publishing in the first decades of the twentieth century. Stribling began with the popular Sunday School publishers and ended his writing career with notable publishing companies such as Random House, Doubleday, and The Century Company. Before the advent of the "Southern Renaissance," when Southern writers became noticed, publishing for a would-be writer was often a difficult concern both in getting a Northern publisher interested in a Southern-based work and in the small financial rewards returned to the writer. Stribling was one of the first of the Southern realists to "re-interest" the North in the works of a Southern writer. Therefore, the correspondence allows the researcher to weave together the steps taken by Stribling to have his works recognized and published. In the correspondence are rejection slips, royalty statements, contract negotiations, book reviews from editors, editorial criticism and the role played by the publisher in ensuring the success of book sales. This correspondence reflects the close relationship between the publisher (editor) and the writer.

The social changes that occurred in the literary and intellectual South during the first decades of the twentieth century are an important part of the correspondence. Stribling was very aware of the metamorphosis of Southern thinking about African Americans and wrote about the change in his correspondence to his Northern and Southern friends. The most important of these writings is the Haynes-Stribling correspondence. Social and literary changes described in Stribling's correspondence include a growing discontent with the old worn planter (master)-slave (subservient) mentality and an effort to portray the plight of blacks in a realistic manner in Southern literature.

Other aspects of his correspondence take on a more personal hue, such as detailed descriptions of Europe, the West Indies, and South American during his many travels and his oftentimes sardonic diatribes against New York City. In addition to these topics there are letters from Theodore Dreiser, Robert Penn Warren, Lyle Saxon, and John Trotwood Moore.

Louella Stribling's (1903-1978) correspondence contains information on her attempts to reprint the works of Stribling during the 1970s. Her efforts on behalf of her late husband culminated in the reprinting of Stribling's popular novels: Teeftallow, The Store, and the highly acclaimed autobiography, Laughing Stock.

The manuscripts are the largest portion of the collection. Due to the efforts of Louella Stribling, the collection of Stribling's writings is virtually complete. Thus the researcher has the opportunity to trace the development of a novel or short story through three or more versions.

The writings contained in the collection fall into several categories. One category is the Sunday School and adventure stories that were published in such popular magazines of the period as American Boy, Holland's Magazine, Youth's Companion, and Everybody's Magazine. With their emphasis on titillating details, sensational and melodramatic plotting and over moralizing, these adventure stories closely anticipated elements that he would use in his novels on intrigue and adventure later in his career. Another category found in the collection is the manuscript versions of his adventure novels, such as Fombombo and Red Sand. A third part is "the social conscience" novels such as Birthright, Teeftallow, Backwater, The Forge, The Store, and Unfinished Cathedral. These works are the first major Southern novels written in a "revolt from the village" tradition. These novels made the preparation for other Southern writers who wanted to treat the experience of black American realistically. Although The Store and The Forge manuscripts are incomplete, the collection includes complete manuscripts of Unfinished Cathedral and The Sound Wagon, a political novel. A small portion of the Stribling writings is unpublished short stories and novels.

The newspaper and magazine clippings and book reviews allow the researcher the opportunity to gauge the popular appeal of the Stribling novels. Included are clippings and reviews for his novels from all over the world, including Germany, South Africa, Fiji, and Great Britain. The two scrapbooks contain clippings reviewing the trilogy.

The notebooks and diaries are the accounts of Stribling's travels in Europe and South America. The journals cover the earliest years of his career at the Taylor-Trotwood Magazine where he served as a traveling spokesman for the magazine. The notebooks are the collective ideas of the writer, for through these "Workbooks" are formed the concepts used in his novels. There are several theses, term papers, and articles dealing with the literary career of Stribling. Scholarly debate over Stribling's thesis reflects this wide variance of opinion. The most important works included in this collection include R.C. Fuller's "T.S. Stribling" and Wilton Eckley's "The Novels of T.S. Stribling: A Socio-Literary Study."

Other categories in the collection are literary contracts for his novels, several speeches and radio interviews, genealogical data, and income tax forms. There is a small collection of photographs taken in San Francisco, Puerto Rico, and South America, and a copy of Stribling's Pulitzer Prize.

The Thomas S. Stribling Papers represent an important contribution to the study of the life and works of a major Southern writer. As one of the generating forces in the literary awakening which occurred in the South in the mid-1920s, Stribling, in his novels with Southern settings, applied the methods of critical realism to a broad and significant subject matter which earlier writers had either overlooked or sentimentalized. In doing so, he brought to the forefront new themes, situations from Southern social history, and character types that more prominent Southern social novelists such as Erskine Caldwell, William Faulkner, Thomas Wolfe, and Robert Penn Warren would treat similarly in their own fiction.
