The overall Nashville industrial market is currently in a state of expansion. Absorption on the macro market level has been consistently positive since 2012, and this, paired with the relatively depressed construction market, has pushed vacancy rates to 6% in late 2015 for the first time since the market downturn. Construction starts have picked up over the last two years. General construction volume in the overall Nashville market rose sharply in the 4th quarter of 2014.

The West submarket is relatively small as compared to the other Nashville area submarkets, comprising roughly 4% of the overall market. This tight supply of industrial space in the submarket has historically kept vacancy relatively low. Given improving industrial market sentiment throughout Nashville and due to the dormancy of construction activity in the submarket over the last half decade, the West submarket is projected to exhibit gradual improvement over the near term.
