INTRODUCTION

Creating and maintaining safe learning environments are everybody's business. While schools remain among the safest places for our students, one incident, whether from natural disasters, technological hazards, or acts of violence disrupts learning and inflicts trauma on students, family, responders, school personnel, and the community in general.

Utah State Code 53A-3-402 (17) requires school boards to adopt and implement comprehensive emergency response plans. It also assigns the State Board of Education the task of developing emergency response plan models that can assist the local school boards. In the spirit of service and cooperation, the Utah Division of Comprehensive Emergency Management (CEM) has prepared this planning guideline to assist these organizations in fulfilling their responsibilities.

Many emergency planning models currently exist and most of them are available. One model recently developed by the state of New York is especially noteworthy and is the primary source for the guidelines presented herein. CEM and the local emergency managers also stand ready to assist school districts to develop community-based Emergency and readiness and response plans.

The basic approach for this planning guideline is multi-hazard. While violence is a pervasive threat and garners headlines in the media, other disasters can be even more traumatic and disruptive (the Ogden elementary school fire in 2001, for example). This approach emphasizes the need for emergency planning, establishes a basic emergency plan that is common to all disasters and emergencies, and specifies those actions that are unique to the various events.

Emergency planning is just one component of a comprehensive, cohesive safe schools program. It must also include prevention, intervention, and recovery. Prevention, intervention, and recovery have psycho-social components that may require the resources of the local school, the school district, the community, and may include resources from the state and federal governments. These components, plus emergency readiness and response must be included if a school emergency plan is to fully address the potential hazards facing our communities. Recovery has a number of components, but includes the critical plan for service continuity/service resumption. The concepts of service continuity and have been largely ignored by many public organizations. These planning guidelines address that aspect of recovery.

INFORMATION ABOUT SCHOOL EMERGENCY PLANNING

The State of Utah Code requires that school emergency plans be prepared at the district level. It is also critical that school building-level plans be formulated using the district plans as guidelines with local conditions, special situations, and local community emergency response agencies being taken into consideration. This is especially important in the majority of Utah school districts as they encompass several local jurisdictions, each of which may have differing resources and standard operating procedures (SOPs).

While code requires the plans to be developed by the school board, it is clear that school district personnel must carry the burden of the effort for the district-wide implementation of school emergency plans. Building-level personnel must also carry the burden of the local plans.

School boards are required to “certify to the State Board of Education that its plan has been practiced at the school level and presented to and reviewed by its teachers, administrators, students, and their parents and local law enforcement and public Emergency representatives” by July 1 each year. (53A-3-402 (17) (e))

It is recommended that a district-wide planning team develop a cohesive and comprehensive Emergency plan that encompasses all aspects of safe schools – prevention, intervention, emergency readiness and response, and recovery. The building-level planning team should include the principles and information from the district plan and make adaptations bases on the local community variations.

The district-wide planning team should consist of at least one representative from each of the following: school board, school district, parent organization, local emergency manager (city or county as applicable), local emergency responders (city or county as applicable), and other school personnel.

The building-level planning team should consist of at least one representative from each of the following: district staff, district transportation, school administrator, teacher(s), custodial staff, school nurse or counselor/psychologist, parent organization, school resource officer (if applicable), local law enforcement, local fire services, public works, local manager, student (if practicable), and other local resources that might be relevant such as Red Cross or other volunteer organizations.

GUIDELINES FOR DEVELOPING SCHOOL EMERGENCY PLANS

The district-wide school emergency plan provides the framework for a school district to identify and implement appropriate strategies for creating and maintaining a safe and secure learning environment for all school personnel. Developed by the district-wide planning team, the district's plan provides the overall guidance and direction for development of the building-level readiness and response plans for each school building within the district. While the district-wide plan covers a broad scope of activities, the individual building plans focus more directly on critical actions that must be taken to protect the Emergency of students and adults in the event of an emergency. Taken together, the district and building plans provide a comprehensive approach to addressing the various hazards and responsibilities facing Utah schools.

Ensuring that schools are a safe place for learning requires a major commitment by all citizens. The effectiveness of any emergency plan hinges on the ability of school administrators and the planning teams to assess the district's unique concerns and security needs, and to identify and implement appropriate strategies for creating and maintaining a safe school environment. These guidelines also emphasize that effective emergency planning works best when administrators, staff, student, parents, and community members undertake an honest and critical appraisal of a school's Emergency and security needs. The appraisal then must be followed by the development of a school plan that addresses the problems and needs identified by the assessment. Only then can a school Emergency plan truly meet the needs of its school community.

Data Based Planning

Recognizing the need for data in decision-making, the following are offered for your consideration in the development of school emergency plans for districts and local schools.

- Data Collection: What information does the school already have available? What else does the school need (internal and external sources)?
- Data Analysis: How can the school use this information to identify its needs?
- Problem-solving: Based on the data, can the school identify what it needs to do?
- Implementation: Based on the research, what strategies are available that would be useful to the school community and address the identified needs?
- Collaboration: How will have the community resources been integrated in the planning process such as law enforcement, fire, EMT, medical services, public works, human services agencies, volunteer organizations, parents, and business organizations?
- Evaluation: How does the school know its strategies have made a difference?

Guiding Principles for Planning

A set of guiding principles has been developed to assist districts, schools, and their planning teams in formulating both questions and answers as they undertake the planning process.

- Schools should build on what is already in place. Many school districts and school buildings have already developed excellent school emergency plans. These should be used as the foundation for revisions and updating.
- Plans should be developed through an open process with community participation. A school emergency is a community emergency and greatly impacts the community, will be responded to by the community, and should be planned for by representatives of the agencies of the readiness and response community.
- Emergency planning should be based on an assessment of data. School emergency plans will be more responsive to particular school needs when data related to the school are used as a basis for planning.
- Emergency plans should be user-friendly, easy to read, and understandable. Plans should be summarized in response checklists that school personnel, substitute teachers and other temporary individuals, and response personnel can easily read and implement.
- Emergency plans should clearly define roles and responsibilities. It is crucial that all key people know their roles and responsibilities, as well as the roles and responsibilities of others in the event of a crisis situation. Plans should also include contingency provisions to enable implementation when key individuals are unavailable or not in a position to perform their roles.
- Staff development should be included in the emergency planning process. For plans to be effective, staff and others involved individuals need to develop their knowledge and skills about the components in the plans and actions to be taken for implementing the components in appropriate situations.
- Emergency plans should be coordinated with non-public schools, where appropriate and recognize the needs of special school populations. Students and staff with disabilities, limited English-speaking students, and other special student populations should be addressed in all plans.
- Emergency plans should be continually reviewed and updated to remain current. Changes in personnel, local conditions, and other factors necessitate periodic review and updating of plans to ensure their applicability to current conditions.

Notes of Caution

Following is a list of suggestions to keep in mind when preparing district-wide and building level emergency plans.

- Don't re-invent the wheel. Districts and schools should build upon existing plans as well as draw upon the experiences of others who have developed and implemented effective plans.
- Leadership is needed throughout the planning process. School and community leadership needs to be continuously provided to build and maintain the momentum for effective planning.
- Effective planning takes time. The planning process must include adequate time in order to ensure broad participation and active involvement of key partners in the development of the plans.
- Beware of "packaged products." The temptation to seek an easy solution by purchasing or obtaining an "off the shelf", pre-packaged school Emergency plan should be avoided.
- Consider formal agreements, if necessary. Changes in personnel, new organizational arrangements, or other factors with the schools and/or partner agencies may necessitate formal agreements with periodic review and updates to ensure the viability of plans over time.

Planning Framework

The following framework may prove useful as planning teams prepare plans at the district and school building levels. For districts and schools that have already prepared plans, or have substantially completed their planning process, the information below can be a useful tool for ensuring that their plans have addressed all relevant components.

First: A sample format for both the district-wide and building-level emergency plans follow herein. Both the District-Wide School Emergency Plan and the Building-Level Emergency Readiness and Response Plan contain a series of components that should be included in the plans. These have been organized into broad categories that group similar activities and strategies in order to reduce any redundancy and/or overlap in policies and procedures. Sample plans for the both the District-Wide School Emergency Plan and the Building-Level Emergency Readiness and Response Plan included in this document are organized according to these four categories:

- General Considerations and Planning Guidelines
- Risk Reduction/Prevention
- Response
- Recovery

Second: A series of resources have been developed to assist in developing school emergency plans. These resources are contained in the appendices and will be helpful in the planning process.

- Appendix 1 consists of a series of guiding questions that have been developed for each of the four categories of the District-Wide Emergency Plan. These questions have been developed to serve as a tool to identify key components to be considered in the planning process. Planning teams may wish to add other questions as they recognize them and as they meet their particular needs.
- Appendix 2 consists of a series of guiding questions that have been developed for each of the four categories of the School-Level Emergency Readiness and Response Plan. These questions have been developed to serve as a tool to identify key components to be considered in the planning process. Planning teams may wish to add other questions as they recognize them and as they meet their particular needs.
- Appendix 3 provides a School Emergency Plan Worksheet that has been developed as a planning tool. The worksheet allows for the organizing of all the key information about policies and procedures in a convenient and easy-to-use format. This tool may be useful to districts and schools as a tool for planning teams to use in the planning process. The tool contains the following sections to identify:
 - whether the planning team (District-Wide or Building-Level) is using the format;
 - which component of the plan is being considered;
 - which specific requirement is to be addressed;
 - guiding questions to stimulate discussion;
 - external and internal resources that could be used;
 - the tasks and activities that could assist the planning team in the planning process; and
 - a summary of the decisions or options selected by the district or school building.
- Appendix 4 is a sample response checklist that will assist personnel at the building-level in responding using a simple checklist for guidance.
- Appendix 5 is a listing of all relevant state agencies to assist in the planning process.
- Appendix 6 is a series of websites that can be useful to school district and to building-level planning teams to answer questions or provide information regarding general or specific issues about school Emergency planning.
- Appendix 7 is a listing of print documents that school district and building-level planning teams might find useful in the planning process.

Using the Sample Formats and Resources as a Framework for Planning

The framework for planning can be a useful tool to ensure that important components are included in the district and building plans. It also provides an easy-to-use format for communicating among individuals and groups participating in the planning process. The following steps provide one way of using the framework for developing school emergency plans:

- Review the guiding principles and the notes of caution in this section with the school emergency planning teams. Combined with the knowledge of the law and regulations, they provide a good starting point for discussion among planning team members on where to begin the planning process. Based upon their knowledge and their experiences, team members may wish to modify, adapt, and/or add principles or notes of caution that more fully reflect local needs and conditions.
- Determine if the four categories (General Considerations and Planning Guidelines, Risk Reduction/Prevention, Response, and Recovery) are useful ways of organizing school emergency planning activities for your district or school. These categories are suggested as a way of grouping similar tasks and activities to ensure that all key components are included in the district and building-level plans. Depending upon local needs, planning team members may wish to consider other categories for grouping activities that may be more appropriate in the local setting.
- Use the guiding questions as an initial checklist of items that need to be addressed in the school emergency plan. The guiding questions incorporate all the key components that need to be addressed in the plans. In many instances, schools have already developed policies and procedures that can be used in their plans. In other cases, the guiding questions will serve to identify areas where additional work or more comprehensive approaches may be needed. Based upon their own experiences within the local school and community, planning team members may suggest additional questions that should be considered in developing the plans.
- Review the School Emergency Plan Worksheet with planning team members.
- Examine the list of key planning components. Discuss and clarify with team members what is included within each component so everyone has a clear understanding of what needs to be included in the plan. Examine existing plans already developed by the district or school to determine which key components need further development.
- Select a set of guiding questions that planning team members agree need to be addressed for any key component. For example, if a district has not yet developed program initiatives for prevention and intervention strategies based on the district assessment, the guiding questions may be helpful to stimulate discussion.
- Identify the resources that are known and available to the district for use by the planning team in developing the school Emergency plan. A listing of these resources on the worksheet will enable all individuals to better understand the resources that were used as a basis for selecting certain strategies or activities. Under external resources, for example, the U.S. Education Department's "Early Warning, Timely Response" may be the key external resource used to help school and community members better understand early warning signs of potentially violent behaviors. Similarly, the school district's current school emergency plan may be a key internal resource used to meet certain key components.

- Determine the tasks and activities that need to be completed in order to develop all the required components in the school emergency plan. For example, a policy for reducing potential acts of violence may call for a new system for the registration of all visitors and wearing of a visitor pass when an individual visits any school. The task could be to establish visitor protocols for school visitors, with activities including: developing sign-in sheets, identifying the roles and responsibilities of school staff when the visitor arrives, and specifying rules for school visitations. The planning worksheets can be used to document the person(s) or group who will complete the activities, and timeframe for their completion.
- Prepare a concise summary of the key strategies and activities included in each category as a way of summarizing for all individuals the important components of the school Emergency plan.
- Review and consider the Sample Outlines for District-Wide School Emergency Plan and the Building-Level School Emergency Readiness and Response Plan as a potential format for developing the school emergency plans. Sample outlines are provided as one way of organizing the information for presentation of the plan. These sample plans provide the structure for the information to be entered for each plan at the district and building levels. Some districts may have already developed their plans in another format or are considering organizing their plan differently. While no single format is required, all key components need to be included so that they are comprehensive.

In conclusion, it is understood that school districts across the state are in varying phases of planning. Some districts have comprehensive school emergency plans in place that have been tested over a period of time, and will have few adjustments to make to their plans in order to incorporate the key components. Other districts may need further assistance to incorporate all of the key components. The sample outlines and resources made available in the guide are designed to assist all districts in their planning process.

SAMPLE OUTLINE FOR DISTRICT-WIDE SCHOOL EMERGENCY PLAN

Introduction

Discussion: The Introduction is used to provide information about the background of the emergency plan. It offers an opportunity for district to provide important background information, describe its philosophy that guided the planning process, and included any other information that may aid people who may be reviewing the plan. The district may state its intent to invite the greater school community to assist in providing a safe school environment, and discuss collaboration that is critical to the emergency plan. The district may also want to discuss its process of needs assessment and the data sources used to develop the plan, including any data specific to the need for the plan any information that is relevant to violence prevention and school Emergency. The sample introduction provided below is one potential format for consideration to initiate this section. District specific information should be added to reflect the individual characteristics of the school district.

Emergencies and violent incidents in school district are critical issues that must be addressed in an expeditious manner. School boards (and, thus, school districts) are required to “adopt and implement a comprehensive emergency response plan...” designed to prevent or minimize the effects of serious violent incidents and emergencies. In order to fulfill this requirement in the most effective manner, it must develop the plan in cooperation with the local and county resources that will be affected by such an emergency. The district-wide plan is responsive to the needs of all schools within the district and is consistent with the more detailed emergency readiness and response plans needed at the school building level. Districts are at risk for a wide variety of acts of violence, natural, and technological disasters. This comprehensive planning effort is designed to address risk reduction/prevention, response, and recovery with respect to a variety of emergencies in the school district and its schools.

Describe the process used by the district in developing this school Emergency plan, including any strategies such as community or student involvement and collaboration. The district may describe the data or process used for needs assessment and implementation of the plan to meet the individualized needs of the district.

The _____ School District supports Utah Code 53A-3-402 (17), and intends to engage in a comprehensive planning process. The Superintendent encourages and advocates on-going cooperation and support for this planning effort.

Section I: General Considerations and Planning Guidelines

Discussion: Section I is used to provide information about key considerations and planning guidelines that were used in developing the district-wide emergency plan. The sample format shown below, for example, includes the purpose of the plan; an identification of the District-Wide School Emergency Team; and identification of the overall concepts of operation included in the plan; and a description of the plan review that will be used in the district. As the district develops this section of its plan, specific information should be provided, such as the names and positions/affiliations of individuals on the planning team; how this plan supports the development and coordination of the Building-Level Emergency Readiness and Response Plans. This may be a section where the district describes what data collection methods it intends to use to identify school Emergency issues, how the data will be analyzed, which problems it wishes to resolve, and what implementation and evaluation strategies it will develop. Inclusion of procedures for review and comment on the emergency plan; date(s) for review and adoption of the plan by the Board of Education; and any other information deemed pertinent should be included in this section.

A. Purpose

The Board will then certify to the State Board of Education that the "plan has been practiced at the school level and presented to and reviewed by its teachers, administrators, students, and their parents and local law enforcement and public Emergency representatives." This certification will take place by July 1 of each year.

Section II. Risk Reduction/Prevention and Intervention

Discussion: Section II of the plan is used to identify and describe the district's policies and procedures for reducing the risk of violence; implementing programs and activities for prevention of violence; and establishing clear descriptions of actions that will be taken in the event of a violent incident or other school emergency. Section IV: Recovery

Discussion: Section IV of the plan is used to identify and describe the district's actions that will be taken after acts of threats or actual violent incidents or other emergencies that have had a major effect on the well being of students, school staff, and the community at-large. District-Wide School Emergency Plans need to be coordinated with the local, state, and federal disaster mental health services to assure that schools have access to all mental health services in the event of a violent incident. If the district chooses, Section IV can be used as the overall guidance for recovery that can facilitate plans at the building level. Educators can also use the recovery to evaluate its current plan and to develop additional strategies such as school Emergency team training in crisis management and development of post-crisis procedures to restore safe school environments.

SAMPLE OUTLINE FOR BUILDING-LEVEL EMERGENCY READINESS AND RESPONSE PLAN

Introduction

Discussion: The Introduction is used to provide information about the background of the Building-Level Emergency Readiness and Response Plan, including how the plan is coordinated with the District-Wide School Emergency Plan. The Introduction Section offers the opportunity for a building to provide important background information, describe its philosophy that guided the planning process, and include any other information that may aid people who will be reviewing the plan. The sample introduction provided below is one potential format for consideration, and building-specific information should be included.

Emergencies in schools must be addressed in an expeditious and effective manner. Schools are at risk of acts of violence, natural, and manmade disasters. The school has engaged in a comprehensive planning effort that addresses prevention, response, and recovery with respect to a variety of emergencies in schools.

Describe the process used by the building in developing this Building-Level Emergency Readiness and Response Plan, including any strategies such as community or student involvement and collaboration. The school may describe the data or process used for needs assessment and implementation of to plan to meet the individualized needs of the school in keeping with the intent of the Utah Code.

The _____ School District supports Utah Code 53A-3-402 (17), and intends to engage in a comprehensive planning process. The Superintendent encourages and advocates on-going cooperation and support for this planning effort.

Section I: General Considerations and Planning Guidelines

Discussion: Section I is used to provide information about key considerations and planning guidelines that were used in developing the building-level plan. The sample format shown below, for example, includes the purpose of the plan; an identification of the building-level teams including the School Emergency Planning Team, the School Emergency Response Team, and the Post-incident Response team; an identification of the overall concepts of operation included in the plan; and a description of the plan review that will be used for the building's plan. As the school building develops this section of its plan, specific information should be provided, such as the names and positions/affiliations of individuals on the school's teams; procedures for review and comment on the plan; date(s) for review and adoption of the plan by the school district and board of education; and any other information deemed pertinent for inclusion in this section.

A. Purpose

The _____ School's Building-Level Emergency Readiness and Response Plan was developed pursuant to Utah Code 53A-3-402 (17) and under the guidelines of the District-Wide School Emergency Plan. - Building-Level Emergency Response Team
- Building-Level Post-incident Response Team

Provide a description of the roles of each team.

C. Concept of Operations

- The initial response to all emergencies at _____ School will be by the Building-Level Emergency Response Team.
- Upon activation of the Building-Level Emergency Response Team, the School District or his/her designee will be notified and , where appropriate, local responders will also be notified.
- Efforts will be supplemented by county and state resources through existing protocols.

D. Plan Review

- The Building-Level Emergency Readiness and Response Plan will be reviewed by relevant building-level and district personnel and by local and/or county responders to ensure that proper coordination and cooperation is accounted for. Plans must be formally adopted by the District Board of Education and certified along with the District-Wide School Emergency Plan.
- The Building-Level Emergency Readiness and Response Plan shall be proprietary and shall not be subject to disclosure to the general public.
- Copies of the Building-Level Emergency Readiness and Response Plan will be supplied to and secured by local and/or county emergency responders as part of their responsibility to contribute to school Emergency.
