Tennessee has been referred to as the Silicon Valley for health care companies – fostering an environment that allows health care pioneers to innovate and grow. However, there has historically been a disconnect between the health care knowledge-base in our State and health outcomes.

We have a unique opportunity to develop public-private partnerships across all health care stakeholders – patients, providers, and payers – that will establish Tennessee as a world-class health care market and improve the health of our citizens.

What We Did

To begin this process, Stuart McWhorter, Commissioner of the Tennessee Department of Finance and Administration, organized four Health Care Listening Tour sessions across Tennessee focused on critical health care topics, including chronic conditions, rural health, medical billing, and innovation. Commissioner McWhorter was joined by:

- Commissioner Danielle Barnes, Department of Human Services
- Deputy Commissioner Carter Lawrence, Department of Commerce and Insurance
- Commissioner Jennifer Nichols, Department of Children's Services
- Commissioner Dr. Lisa Piercey, Department of Health
- Director Gabe Roberts, TennCare
- Commissioner Bob Rolfe, Department of Economic and Community Development
- Commissioner Brad Turner, Department of Intellectual and Developmental Disabilities
- Commissioner Marie Williams, Department of Mental Health and Substance Abuse Services

This effort was a public-private partnership that included informational meetings with patients, providers, and payers in each of our three grand divisions, as well as approximately 50 small group meetings to collect in-depth feedback and perspective on opportunities to improve health care in Tennessee.

What We Did: Held four Health Care Listening Tour sessions from July – August 2019 and conducted approximately 50 additional one-on-one or small group stakeholder meetings.

Why We Did It: Gathered insight from patient, provider, and payer stakeholders to identify health care opportunities and challenges.

What We Heard: Five major themes, all of which will drive health care access: 1) Transportation, 2) Technology and telehealth, 3) Rural health, 4) Social determinants of health, and 5) Transparency in healthcare.

What’s Next: Form a Health Care Modernization Task Force to discuss these themes in public and advise on potential solutions.

Why We Did It

Tennessee ranks 42nd in the nation in overall state health rankings¹, and has significant room for improvement on a number of health measures.

We need to understand the root cause of the issues preventing us from being a healthier, and therefore more prosperous State. Our goal was to listen and have candid conversations with Tennesseans who are the closest to health care’s most complex issues.

What We Heard

Department Commissioners led discussions alongside experts to further explore improving rural health, reducing chronic conditions, improving transparency, and helping to foster innovation. Through those discussions and subsequent conversations with other health care leaders, we heard five major themes, all of which coalesced around access.

1. Transportation is a significant barrier to care.

   “Transportation is one of the biggest things and it blocks people from getting the care that they need, the medications that they need, getting physical therapy, everything that you can imagine. They are really just stuck inside that house, and that leads to so many more issues.”

2. Technology, including telehealth, can help address access issues and support chronic care management.

   “In some situations, the next nearest hospital could be more than 25 miles away and through mountainous terrain. Trying to access care in some of these areas can be very challenging.”

3. There are significant health care access barriers in rural communities.

   “The major factors in determining how healthy you are your ZIP code and your behaviors. There are some parts of the country where your ZIP code is the best predictor of your health status.”

4. Social determinants of health will be important to address.

   “As payers, when a bill came in and emergency service was wrapped around it, we insulated the patient. The person making the consumer decisions now is completely insulated to what’s going on behind the scene until they get a bill.”

5. Greater transparency in healthcare may improve patient outcomes and experiences.

Additional Findings and Analysis

In addition to what we have learned through the discussions, we will also consider the following:

- Certain areas of Tennessee face more complicated health care-related challenges and may struggle with multiple health care and social determinant challenges simultaneously.
- “One size fits all” approaches that fail to account for unique community circumstances may not be feasible.
- Additional barriers, including geography and economic stability, could hinder a strategy’s success.

The following map shows each county’s rank within the State for overall health rankings with lighter colors indicating better performance. This map can help identify which areas of Tennessee have multiple health care-related challenges.
What’s Next

The State will continue to facilitate discussions with agency partners, patients, providers, payers, and other interested stakeholders to improve the health outcomes for Tennesseans. To do this, the State is announcing the Health Care Modernization Task Force.

Based on the Listening Tour, we identified some potential topics for the Health Care Modernization Task Force to explore and provide options for consideration.

- Align state, private, and public entities to better serve communities, particularly in rural Tennessee
- Expand physician and other healthcare workforce development programs, as well as examine the capacity of the existing healthcare workforce
- Increase use of technology to help address access gaps
- Modernize facilities
- Address social determinants of health to help foster healthier populations
