

Design Your Own Money

The United States government has given your students a big job: re-design the money we use every day! How will they decorate coins and paper money? Will they add animals? Different colors? People they care about?

Many templates exist for this kind of activity, including the page below from Financial Fitness for Life (grades K-2 workbook). For older students, extend the exercise with a longer writing prompt asking them to explain their choices. Also consider showing students examples of money from other countries; they may be surprised to see how different money looks around the world!
