The Carter & Moyers School of Education at Lincoln Memorial University (LMU) is dedicated to preparing professional educators of distinction who embody the three core ideals of Values, Education, and Service; demonstrate the dispositions of the education profession; demonstrate the teaching skills and learning strategies acquired through rigorous academic studies and active engagement in real life classroom experiences while involved in field and clinical placement in partner P 12 schools; promote lifelong learning through continued professional development and scholarship; assist in meeting the educational needs of a global society, especially the under served; and articulate an understanding that all students can learn as well as demonstrate dispositions to serve and teach diverse student populations.

The Carter & Moyers School of Education at Lincoln Memorial University (LMU) offers graduate-level Instructional Leadership programs at the Master of Education (MEd) and Educational Specialist (EdS) levels, aligned with the Tennessee Instructional Leadership Standards (TILS). These programs prepare current educators to lead in public or private school settings. The MEd in Instructional Leadership is a fully online 33-credit hour program culminating in a clinical experience and capstone portfolio submission. The EdS in Instructional Leadership is a 30-credit hour program offered online or in a hybrid format, also culminating in a clinical experience and capstone portfolio submission. All Instructional Leadership completers are required to complete the School Leadership Licensure Assessment (SLLA) for licensure.
