November Is Adoption Month

The theme of the 2017 National Adoption Month is "Teens Need Families, No Matter What" and underscores the lack of permanent homes for older youth. National Adoption Month was created by the federal Children's Bureau to focus attention on the need for permanent families for children in care. Over the past two years, the event has zeroed in on children ages 13 and above. As the Children's Bureau said, "Securing lifelong connections for these teens, legally and emotionally, is an urgent need and critical component of their future achievement and overall well-being."

The Tennessee Department of Children's Services (DCS) is one of eight state programs piloting the National Adoption Competency Mental Health Training Initiative. This effort, led nationally by the Center for Adoption Support and Education (C.A.S.E.), with funding from the Children's Bureau, creates web-based training to build the capacity of child welfare professionals and mental health practitioners serving youth. The program strives to improve each child’s well-being as he or she moves towards a permanent home and stability.

DCS staff, along with the staff from 12 contract agencies, recently completed the Child Welfare Professional training that improves how they address the mental health needs of children who have been adopted or achieved guardianship. The child welfare training consists of 20 hours divided into 10 two-hour webinars to be completed in four months, with three hours of additional training for supervisors. It nurtures understanding and detection of these issues and encourages working with birth parents to address mental health needs. Over 1,200 Tennessee child welfare professionals have completed the training as of October 2017.

Implementation of a more clinical 25-hour Mental Health Practitioner curriculum focused on assessment, treatment planning and evidence-supported interventions for working with children and youth, parent and guardians and families will begin in March 2018.

Tennessee Adoption Support Services

Family and Children’s Services, a Nashville-based nonprofit, provides supportive services for children in custody and families planning for adoption. During National Adoption Month, the agency is sponsoring the Second Annual Conference for Youth and Teens, with participation by families considering adoption. The agency partners with DCS and Harmony Family Center as part of the statewide TRANSform initiative to improve child welfare services through system wide, trauma-informed practice.

The Dave Thomas Foundation focuses on ensuring no youth are "unadoptable." In Tennessee, Family and Children’s Services has a Wendy's Wonderful Kids grant, with locations in Nashville and Memphis, targeted to moving children who have been waiting for adoption the longest into adoptive homes. Family and Children's Services staff are among the 270 recruiters working on the project nationwide. Children referred to the project are generally older than 8 years, a third have had six or more placements and over half have been in foster care for more than four years. During National Adoption Month, the agency is sponsoring the Second Annual Conference for Youth and Teens, with participation by families considering adoption.

The Adoption Support and Preservation (ASAP) helps by providing a system of supports for children and families both pre and post adoption. Services include individualized in-home care, crisis intervention, post adoption relief team building, support, adoption preparation classes, advocacy and community education. It is a collaboration between Harmony Family Center and Catholic Charities of Tennessee, Inc., funded by DCS.

"You Don't Have to Be Perfect to Be a Perfect Parent" Campaign

This video might make you chuckle. (Or this one.) While humorous, both videos address a real concern. Currently over 21,000 youth ages 13 to 18 are in the U.S. foster care system. While some parents may be disheartened by the challenges of older adoptees, studies show that adolescents who are adopted from the foster care system are more likely to finish high school, graduate from college and reveal higher emotional security than youth who remain in the system.

A project of the federal Children's Bureau, AdoptUSKids encourages adoption of children in foster care. It is also supported by the Adoption Exchange Association.

AdoptUSKids created "You Don't Have to Be Perfect to Be a Perfect Parent," a campaign to address barriers to adoption and fostering.

AdoptUSKids tackles the need for adolescent adoption with a witty ad campaign that prepares prospective parents for the demands of teenage life. While the videos are humorous, they also underscore the fact that foster youth are similar to non-foster teens in the need for families and support, and in this way are no different than any other adolescent.

Who Considers Adoption?

The Dave Thomas Foundation for Adoption, which has a primary focus on recruitment of adoptive families for children in foster care, released its fourth Adoption Attitudes Survey this year. The survey found an increase in reported adoption and awareness of adoption and foster care. Eighty percent of the one in four people who have considered adoption have considered adopting through foster care. The percentage of respondents who considered every child adoptable (58 percent) increased from the 51 percent agreeing to this in 2012.

Tennessee CASA (Court Appointed Special Advocate) named TCCY youth member Annemarie Rainwater as its 2017 "Light of Hope" award winner. Committed to helping children in care, she participated with the launch of TN Fosters Initiative and was the Youth Voice for National CASA at a national convention. CASA named state Sen. Ferrell Haile as its "Legislator of the Year."

TCCY is pleased to participate in a real win-win partnership with local universities, giving student interns an opportunity to learn about advocacy and our programs. This year we are pleased to have Caitlin McCollister, a UT College of Social Work student from Nashville, working with us. Caitlin, a Nashvillian, has been a teacher and educator and has an MA in education from American University.
