Happy Holidays and More

As the year ends and the holiday season begins, TCCY celebrates the advocacy work done across the state on behalf of children, wishes for a better year for all children and looks forward to a busy 2018.

In line with the designation of December as National Human Rights Month and the release of the report from the Joint Ad-Hoc Tennessee Blue Ribbon Task Force on Juvenile Justice, this newsletter focuses on juvenile justice.

TCCY hopes for happy and safe holidays for all, especially children.

National Human Rights Month: Juvenile Justice Spotlight

December is Universal Human Rights Appreciation Month. It is also a good time to reflect on juvenile justice reform as a global issue. Human Rights Watch has consolidated information from numerous states and governments to prescribe a set of common-sense and universal ideals for keeping children safe and out of formal juvenile justice systems. Its last report recommended alternative procedures to formal institutionalization. Successful options include probation, mediation, counseling, community service and programs within the child’s community. For children who use drugs, the report stated, proper programs should stress treatment and care. When children’s behaviors are adequately understood and addressed, communities experience positive results and young individuals are allowed to contribute to society to everyone’s benefit.

Joint Ad-Hoc Tennessee Blue Ribbon Task Force on Juvenile Justice

The Joint Ad-Hoc Tennessee Blue Ribbon Task Force on Juvenile Justice released its report with major findings and recommendations. The task force, led by the Speaker of the Tennessee House of Representatives Beth Harwell and the Tennessee Senate Majority Leader Mark Norris, was made up of Tennessee juvenile justice experts. Goals of the group were to protect public safety; effectively hold juvenile offenders accountable; contain taxpayer costs; and improve outcomes for youth, families and communities in Tennessee.

The report found nearly half those held in a costly out-of-home placements had low level offenses, perhaps because of a lack of community based programs. Outcomes were inconsistent across the state, as were data collection and communication.

The task force recommendations meet three goals:

- Prevent deeper juvenile justice system involvement of lower-level youth through early response;
- Protect public safety and contain costs by focusing system resources on the highest-risk youth;
- Sustain effective practices through continued oversight and reinvestment in a stronger continuum of evidence-based services statewide.

The final report will be released this week. TCCY will make it available.

Tennessee Ranks Top in Combating Human Trafficking

Shared Hope International recently released a 2017 scorecard grading each state on the strength of its laws addressing child sex trafficking. Tennessee received a score of 96.5 out of 100, the highest grade in the nation and a clear A+. No state received perfect marks.

This superior score reflects recent efforts of the Tennessee Bureau of Investigation (TBI) to tackle human trafficking in the state. TBI initiatives in the last few years include improved victim services, new legislation, support for investigative forces and a renewed focus on arresting predators.

The report praised Tennessee’s aggressive laws and offered a few recommendations. For instance, increasing trial protections and reducing potential bars to victim compensation might increase the willingness of victims to pursue justice. Specialized responses to victims could get Tennessee even closer to a 100 percent score. The website provides state-by-state legal analysis as well as a breakdown of each final grade by criteria.

Focus on Human Trafficking Gives Cyntoia's Story Has a New Plot Twist

Cyntoia Brown, the subject of a 2011 Independent Lens documentary, "Me Facing Life: Cyntoia's Story," is the impetus for a renewed focus on human trafficking. Celebrities, including Kim Kardashian, who volunteered her lawyers to help, have signed on to #FreeCyntoiaBrown.

Changes in system and community understanding of women and children who are trafficked as victims have reoriented attention on Brown's case. As a runaway, she was trafficked and killed a man who picked her up. She said she shot him with his own gun after becoming frightened for her safety. The case was transferred to adult court where she was found guilty of first degree murder and given a life sentence.

The 6th Circuit Court of Appeals is scheduled to hear her case next year.

Keeping Christmas: Social Messaging in the 19th Century

In 1843, appalled by the treatment of child workers, Charles Dickens vowed to strike a “sledgehammer blow . . . on behalf of the Poor Man’s Child.” He tore up a pamphlet he was writing and instead brought his concerns to life in the characters and dialogue of A Christmas Carol. Jacob Marley sums up Dickens’ message of employer responsibility as:

Mankind was my business; charity, mercy, forbearance, and benevolence, were, all, my business. The deals of my trade were but a drop of water in the comprehensive ocean of my business!

The book has moved readers for 174 years.

(This information may differ from that in the movie, "The Man who Invented Christmas.)
