TCCY Is Excited About New Tools to Talk to You

One of TCCY’s core activities is to Educate and Inform. The primary tools to implement this goal are:

- TCCY’s participation in the KIDS COUNT program, which fulfills TCCY’s legislatively mandated requirement to create an annual report on child well-being in Tennessee;
• the Resource Mapping Project, which details how the state spends funds to serve children; and
• kidcentral tn, the resource to link families to services and inform them on how they can work together.

Many components of TCCY also play a role in information sharing, including Regional councils and their coordinators, and its collaborative groups; the Council on Children's Mental Health, Home Visiting Leadership Alliance, Youth Transitions Advisory Council, the Young Child Wellness Council and TCCY Building Strong Brains Training for Trainers.

TCCY's website, meetings and trainings and this newsletter are tools to educate and inform. TCCY is excited to be expanding our ability to educate and inform with a new tool and improved newsletter creation and distribution.

Podcasts, digital audio files available on your phone, tablets or computers, entertain and educate. TCCY, relying on the skills and experience of Jonquil Newland, will be rolling out the agency’s first podcast called, “Roots and Wings.” The first guest to sit down with Newland is TCCY Executive Director Richard Kennedy. Every month “Roots and Wings” will highlight a new subject or topic that impacts children and families across Tennessee. Please let us know if you have ideas for TCCY’s podcast.

Information about the podcast will be available on TCCY’s website, social media and on major podcast streaming services like Spotify and iTunes. You can also contact jonquil.newland@tn.gov.

TCCY has had an Advocate newsletter since it became the Commission on Children and Youth with the merger of the Children’s Services Commission and Juvenile Justice Commission in 1988. It changed from a printed edition to a digital version in July 1, 2003. It became a monthly email in the fall of 2013.

As our options for sharing information increase, we are constantly re-evaluating to find the best ways of communicating and informing. We anticipate major changes in the tool TCCY uses to create and distribute its mailings and newsletters. Information about signing up for TCCY emails will be shared when it come available.

Please let us know if TCCY’s Advocate newsletter is useful to you and what ways to receive information work best for you, by filling out this survey.

TCCY began communicating through social media nine years ago when its staff were washed out of their offices during the 2010 flood. None of the usual methods of communication were available the initial week after the flood. We are not sure anyone was seeing our initial Facebook posts, but, out of necessity, we began to use social media to communicate. We try to keep abreast of changes in media, including social media. TCCY continues to grow its knowledge of social media platforms and has received technical assistance to develop a campaign to increase understanding of the Building Strong Brains Tennessee ACEs information.
